Not illustrated. 1861 Excerpt: . . . to each other upon earth, will not be perpetuated in heaven. When an architect finishes his building, he takes down his scaffolding. These present relationships are a part of the flesh and blood which, the apostle Paul tells us, cannot inherit the kingdom of God. The Lord Jesus himself tells us, that the children of the resurrection--the glorified in heaven--neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God. But whilst we will not meet in heaven holding the same relationship to each other which we did upon earth, I believe we will know those there, when we rise and meet them before God unveiled, who are at present our beloved friends here. It is somewhat strange that this doctrine of the recognition of friends in heaven should ever have been called in question; but, strange as it may appear, there are some individuals who doubt it, and there are others who deny it This at least cannot be denied, that in every pious heart there exists the wish that the doctrine were true; for who, indeed, would like to part with those near and dear to them, at their death, never to see them more, so as to recognise them again It has been questioned what would be gained by the non-recognition of our friends in heaven. It would be difficult to say, but I can tell what we would lose by it. We would lose the delight of meeting, in...
