With the current political climate, it's necessary for us to look at the issues and ourselves with a critical mind. By this, I mean that we have to be more accepting to other ideas. When we look at what we hold dear, we think our thoughts are the only right and moral way to look at the issue. We can't imagine the possibility that others can have a difference of opinion. Are they so blind that they can't see the truth in front of their eyes? It's so easy to see the truth if you just think it through. But if you take the time to think it through yourself, you'd see that yours is not the only way. Just because someone else may not agree with you doesn't make them wrong. It also doesn't make you right. It just makes them different. It doesn't matter what the issue is; you have your opinions just like others have their opinions. Abortion, climate change, economics, gun control, immigration, religion, race, no matter what issue you hold dear, someone is going to disagree with you. You can think that you have all the facts on your side, but do you? Do you have proof? Do you have evidence that no one can disprove? I don't think so, and if you think about it, neither do you. Years ago, the greatest minds told us that that world was flat. They had proof. They had evidence. They were wrong. What was it that proved them wrong? It was curiosity and critical thinking. That same philosophy can be used to think through the issues of our time....
