Petulant she spoke, and at herself she laughed, A rosebud set with little wilful thorns, And sweet as English air could make her. Tennyson. One evening, a few weeks afterwards, Mr. Daunt remarked to his wife, Carter has been talking to me about his son. His son she said. Oh! you mean the well-dressed young man. Yes, he continued; he was brought up by an aunt in the north of England. She was a Mrs. Golding, and I think years ago I heard something of her. I believe there used to be some gossip about her and Lord Wennington. She was a lady, then, said Claire. (170) Certainly, he answered, she was what is called a lady. I thought the young fellow looked like a gentleman, she remarked. He was accustomed to a set of people quite different from his own family, continued Mr. Daunt, and the aunt is now dead, and has left him a considerable income. Carter is concerned about the lad. Is it because he dresses so well she asked; I notice that bad tailors, after good preachers, seem to be regarded as the most efficient instruments of grace. Mr. Daunt laughed--he always laughed at Claires sharp sayings; but he replied, Really, Claire, youre not complimentary to the cloth. Which inquired Claire. Well, perhaps both; but, Claire, I wish you would try to feel a little more kindly to these people. I have tried, she answered, petulantly, and...
