Terrorists are alive and well, busy with their sabotage of the United States, the country they expect to take over for themselves. A target city has been selected. A plan is in place. They are certain they can far surpass what happened to the twin towers in New York City on 911. Meanwhile one of the oldest nuclear power plants in the US has a major radiation leak. The power plant company does not want to reveal the severity of the accident. A cover-up is devised which shuts the plant down, but the inspectors, headed by John Rockford, are not to arrive for two weeks. The news has been reporting that nothing major has happened. The cover-up begins as the inspectors are ordered to take two-week vacation before arriving at the damaged nuclear plant. Four of these young scientists decide to use their vacation time to take a road trip down Route 66, heading toward a location outside of Chicago proper. In route, they discover it is now a well-traveled road, with much to offer. They make stops along the way, sitting upon the worlds largest rocking chair, visiting with armadillos, and generally amusing themselves as they get to know each other. Valeria and Travis are in the back seat of Johns SUV. Aadhil is up front by John. Bear- Lee-a-Dog sits wherever he can. Tressa, the fifth nuclear scientist, a gorgeous tall blond who lives in Northern California, decides to take a more direct approach, and travels a different route. She stops along the way and meets up with a variety of people, some who seem to be planning foreboding things. Everyone meets in Chicago before their vacations are...
