Excerpt: . . . CHAPTER FIFTEENTH. SHADOWS DESCEND. Trials must and will befall; But with humble faith to see Love inscribed upon them all--This is happiness to me. Trials make the promise sweet; Trials give new life to prayer; Bring me to my Saviors feet, Lay me low, and keep me there. Claras weakness gradually but steadily increased. Even a walk at recess was painful, and more frequently did she ask permission to remain out of school. She lost many recitations, and was often for days together in the nursery with Miss Wood. The winter gradually disappeared. Early in March, peeping above the snow, appeared the crocus, and the pure snow-drop, those sweet harbingers of spring; but their advent brought no increase of strength to little Clara: she smiled when she first observed them, for she dearly loved flowers, but they spoke to her not of earthly, but of unfading blossoms in the Paradise above. Nor did they gladden the spirits of her affectionate sister; she saw the shadows deepening around her pathway, and not even spring flowers which she so dearly loved, could dissipate the sadness; she longed for her parents presence. The last letters had spoken of her fathers return early in the spring, as business called him home; but the state of Mrs. Vintons health rendered that inexpedient for her; she was now under the care of a celebrated physician, whose remedies had seemed more beneficial than any which she had tried at home, but...
