Laurentius, in a great measure, adopted the anatomy and doctrines of Galen, relative to the nervous system. In his whole history of the brain, he says, I do not see that Galen has erred, except as to the plexus mirabilis, which in man is so small, as almost to escape the eye. With respect to the nature, uses, and distribution of the nerves, Laurentius very generally agrees with Galen. He offers some ingenious conjectures in explanation of the circumstance, that feeling sometimes remains when the power of moving is lost, and the contrary.
