Excerpt from Harper s Monthly Magazine, Vol. 26: European Edition; June to November, 1893 Not very similar. There were the high cheek-bones common to both races, the straight hair and straight nose of the Indian, and the full thick lips of the negro, while the gay, bright colors of the head dress suggested both negro and Indian taste. With such a subject Mr. Chase could not fail to make both an interesting and beautiful picture. In this one he has done more than escape failure, for the picture, beyond its value as a study of an interesting type of humanity, has great decorative qualities, and without such qualities no pictures ever seem much.
