From the Introduction. IN this day of heart-breaking competition, making good in business is ordinarily considered as being a job big enough to engage the best energies of any man whomsoever he may be, whatsoever his calling. The percentage of men who really make good is pitifully small. To learn of a man who possessed the will power to rise from his bed at a time when he was considered as good as dead, select a vocation, make good in that vocation, using only the most upright and ethical methods in so doing; to learn of a man who did all that, and still has time, and strength, and heart to turn around and tell others how they also can climb the rugged heights, is immensely interesting. What was it-genius? Mr. Babson says not, but just plain upright determination and work. He has a passion for work. But whatever it may have been, one thing is certain, that one who has risen over such obstacles to a great nation-wide success has qualified himself to write authoritatively on the subject Making Good in Business. The service which Mr. Babson s wonderful business organization renders is in the preparation and supply of statistical reports. Statistics are proverbially dry, and yet so thoroughly and so conscientiously is the service rendered, that to many thousands of American business men, the information supplied by the Babson Statistical Organization constitutes the inspiration of the day, a living demonstration of what intensity of purpose can accomplish in the direction of exalting the commonplace. Babson does not believe in switching from one business to another in the hope that, eventually, some smooth path to success may be found. He...
