African animism is the oldest religion in the world. It evolved during the 200,000 years that Homo sapiens existed on the African continent. Belief in the spirit world, in the afterlife, in the co-existence of the dead with the living, are tenets of faith that continue to prevail throughout Africa. It was carried intact in the first wave of migration to the farthest reaches of Asia and was carried across to the Americas 15,000 years ago. In the Orient, it is described by the West as Ancestor Worship. In North America it is Shamanism, after the shamans or priests of the Native Americans. All animists, whether African, Jewish, Christian, Japanese or Native American, believe in the afterlife and pay homage to their ancestral spirits. Although the ancient Egyptians were polytheistic, the roots of their religion would have been the ancient African religion perhaps distorted by the fables told to children in which animals could talk. This distortion of African teaching could have developed into the gods with animal and bird heads. This could also have been the origin of the elephant and monkey gods of Hinduism, transmitted after the initial migration of Homo sapiens. Indians carried this polytheism to Europe, where the animal gods were replaced by humans with human attributes. Animistic beliefs would have been adopted by the Hebrews before they left Egypt for the Promised Land. Moses was a prince of Egypt. He would have been exposed to African concepts and beliefs. The similarities between Animism and the religion started by Moses result from this assimilation. Their honoured ancestors were called prophets. In the Christian church that evolved from Judaeen animism, they are known as saints. Relics reminded the...
