The Bishop of St. Andrews, and the Rev. R. W. Ken From various friends, to whom warm acknowledgments have been privately made, I have received much assistance in the preparation of this essay. Notwithstanding this help, however, I cannot expect that in a volume written in fragments of time, amid many and serious hindrances, and without easy access to books of reference, I can, even with the exercise of the utmost care, have avoided some mistakes. That which I earnestly claim is, that these pages may be judged, not by collateral errors, which do not affect the general question, but by conclusions resting on the main points of the case. In an inquiry of this kind, it always happens either that the case breaks down as the investigation becomes closer, or that the conviction becomes stronger and stronger from point to point. My experience in the matter before us has been of the second kind; and I am persuaded that, with a larger command of information and of time, this argument could have been considerably strengthened.
