One day you ll get married. Keep your legs closed. Dance. --from Grandmother Said In one of Aesop s Fables, the Roman slave Androcles befriends the emperor s lion prior to his trial and thereby survives certain death in the arena. Constance Quarterman Bridges s father tells this story to his children and says, My Babies, we re special people, lions don t eat us. In this remarkable debut collection, Bridges chronicles her ancestry--part born out of slavery, part descended from Cherokee heritage--from her great-grandparents jumping over the broom in Civil War Virginia to her father s journey in the Great Migration northward in 1916. The result is an unequivocally American story. Lions Don t Eat Us is the 2005 winner of the Cave Canem Poetry Prize, given to the best...
