Public administration is a system of public servants managing an array of services, programs, and other related actions that occur in the public sector, whether that is government, nonprofit, and in other cases, nongovernmental or not-for-profit organizations. This level of management is extremely necessary in order for much of everyday society to operate, however, it is also even more necessary that those administrating those services ensure that they are component, fair, and just individuals or groups who hold at least a reasonable amount of knowledge and expertise in order to effectively administer said services to its respective recipients. This exchange of services from the servicer or service provider to clientcustomer service recipient, in...
